eight inches apart. Colourful nemesias, which have a reputation of being difficult, are really delightful eight-inch high plants that we've had little trouble growing in St. Alban's "stained glass" garden along the front of the church. It does get some afternoon shade. Annual scabiosa (mourning bride), godetia/clarkia, salpiglossis are not common but lovely annuals, well worth the extra effort they take to grow, as is temperamental schizanthus (butterfly flower). Mimulus prefers a dampish spot that gets some afternoon shade, while gode-tia/clarkia (wild flowers in northern California) dislike heat and drought, so give them shelter from the hot afternoon sun and water when dry. Treat schizanthus with their small clusters of orchid-like blooms likewise and you'll be well rewarded.
